A PRIMER OF OPERANT CONDITIONING

G. S. Reynolds, University of California, San Diego

A concise, up-to-date introduction to the major concepts and principles of operant conditioning. Theoretical creed and experimental methods are presented first, followed by chapters on the basic facts of acquisition (including shaping) and extinction; the functions of a discriminative stimulus in discrimination, generalization, and secondary, or conditioned reinforcement; and the complexities of the notion of contingency. Schedules of reinforcement and the performances they maintain are discussed. Pavlov's respondent conditioning is introduced at length just before the treatment of avoidance, escape, and punishment. The necessary coextensiveness of operant and respondent conditioning with both positive and negative reinforcement is explained and emphasized. The primer ends with a discussion of emotion and motivation, introducing the approach of operant conditioning into the consideration of the behaviors of gesture and language. January, approx. 160 pages, $3.75

CONTEMPORARY RESEARCH IN OPERANT BEHAVIOR

A. C. Catania, New York University

A collection of papers, primarily experimental, illustrating the current research in the field of operant behavior and relating it to psychology in general. The major topic is operant behavior, with emphasis on animal learning; the book also deals with respondent behavior and the implications of conditioning for human behavior. Each paper is introduced with commentary by the author, which provides the historical background and experimental context. Spring, approx. 384 pages, softbound, prob. $5.50
